Army Heritage Day

US Army Heritage & Education Center, Carlisle, PA.

Based on the responses received, the living history event to be held on October 8th has been added to our schedule. This event will be held on the grounds of the US Army Heritage & Education Center outside Carlisle, Pennsylvania. A detailed schedule with maps will follow in a special mailing.

This event will highlight daily soldier activities. Our activities will be centered on their newly built replica winter huts. We will be joined for this program by the 83rd PA, 1st ME Cavalry, Liberty Rifles, and South Mountain Battlefield Artillery Crew. Our new US Sanitary Commission detachment will be present also.

USAH&EC was opened in the spring of 2004. The first of what will be a five building complex is Ridgeway Hall, which houses the US Army

Military History Institute

(USAMHI), formerly housed on the post at Carlisle Barracks. Eventually the complex will include a museum, conservation facility, and artifact storage space. Also included will be outdoor exhibits that will include a 1750's Blockhouse, Revolutionary War Redoubt, WWI Trench line, and WWII Barracks.

1863 SPECIFICATIONS

From: Notes on Preparing Stores for the United States Army and on the Care of the Same, etc, with a few rules for Detecting Adulterations, LTC C.L. Kilburn, ACG of Subsistence - 1863

Should be made of best quality of superfine, or what is usually known as extra superfine flour; or better, of extra and extra superfine, (half and half). Hard bread should be white, crisp, light and exhibit a flaky appearance when broken. If tough, solid and compact, is evident the fault is either in the stock, manufacture or baking; it should not present the appearance of dried paste. If tough and pasty, it is probably manufacture from grown wheat, or Spring wheat of an inferior kind. In all cases it should be thoroughly cooled and dried before packing. Kiln drying, where practicable, for long voyages, is particularly desirable; but if really and thoroughly dried in the oven, hard bread will keep just as well and its flavor is not destroyed. To make good hard bread, it is essential to employ steam; hand work will not do.

The dough should be mixed as dry as possible; this is, in fact, very essential, and too much stress can not be placed on it. Good stock, dry mixed, and thoroughly baked, [not dried or scalded] will necessarily give good hard bread. If salt is to be used, it should be mixed with the water used to mix the dough. Both salt and water should be clean. Bread put up with the preceding requirements should keep a year; but as a usual thing, our best bread as now made for army use, will keep only about three months. Good, bread, packed closely and compactly should not weigh, net, per barrel, more than 70 or 80 pounds; should it be heavier that 80 it indicates too much moisture. The thickness of the biscuit is important; it should not be so thick as to prevent proper drying, or so thin as to crumble in transportation. The quality of stock used for hard bread can be partially told by rules mentioned in the article 'Flour,' as far as they apply. The term 'sprung' is frequently used by bakers, by which is meant raised or flaky bread, indicating strong flour and sound stock. The cupidity of the contracting baker induces him to pack his bread as soon as it comes out of the oven, and before the moisture has been completely expelled by drying. Bread of this kind hangs on breaking; it will also be soft to the pressure of the finger nail when broken, whereas it should be crisp and brittle.

The packages should be thoroughly seasoned, (of wood imparting no taste or odor to the bread,) and reasonably tight. The usual method now adopted is to pack 50 pounds net, in basswood boxes, (sides, top and bottom [] inch, ends 5/8 of an inch,) and of dimensions corresponding with the cutters used, and strapped at each end with light iron or wood. The bread should be packed on its edge compactly, so as not to shake.

Bread thoroughly baked, kiln dried, and packed in spirit casks, will keep a long time but it is an expensive method. If bread contains weevils, or is mouldy, expose to the sun on paulins, and before re-packing it, rinse the barrel with whiskey.

C. J. Daley Overcoat Sale

During the month of August, C. J. Daley is having a sale on Federal Overcoats. Normally $425, if ordered during the month of August, the price will be $385, a savings of $40.

Mr. Daley's goods are well known for their quality, as well as reasonable prices. By comparison an overcoat from C & D Jarnigain is $240, and to have the buttons sewn on is $35 extra. While that sounds remarkably cheap you have to factor in all of the added work needed to bring a Jarnagin coat up to the level of one of Mr. Daley's creations. This alone makes the coat a bargain.

Trigger finger mittens are also on sale. These replicas are based on an original pair in the Don Troiani collection. Normally $45, the sale price is $30. A true bargain not seen often.

Although you may not be thinking of winter clothing now, the Payne's Farm event is only two months away. Don't get stuck there without a good overcoat or pair of mittens!

Fatigue Blouse Kits

The Jersey Skillet Licker has announced that he is now offering unlined fatigue blouse kits. These garments are complete except for flat felling of the seams, buttons, and buttonholes. Buttons are supplied. This is a good way for folks to get an extra blouse as well as learn about period sewing.

The price on these kits is $95, plus $10 postage, which is a very good deal. For more information, go to
